“ As the CFO of City Rescue Mission, I’m grateful for the partnership we’ve built with Schooley Mitchell. From the start, their team has taken the time to truly understand who we are and the mission we serve—transforming the lives of those experiencing poverty, hunger, homelessness, and addiction through the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ. It’s been clear from day one that this is more than a business relationship—it’s a shared commitment to stewardship and impact.

Working with Schooley Mitchell has been both productive and empowering. Their analysts are experts in their field, and they’ve helped us uncover meaningful cost savings without ever pressuring us or taking decisions out of our hands. At every step, our team has remained in full control, with Schooley Mitchell acting as a trusted advisor—not just a vendor. Their model ensures our goals are fully aligned, and the results speak for themselves. We deeply value this partnership and wholeheartedly recommend their services to other organizations seeking both savings and a relationship grounded in trust.

Jeremiah Stokes, CFO, City Rescue Mission

“ Over the past several months I have been working with Adam Baker and David Dow of Schooley Mitchell who are Business Partners with Citygate. During our first discussion I raised a concern about our ministry being too small for them to spend their time on, or to find meaningful savings. Their answer was that there was no “too small” when it comes to God’s work and if they could assist us in moving cents or dollars from expenses to ministry then it would be well worth the effort. I had a sense that I could trust them, their values, and their motives so we moved forward reviewing our waste services and credit card processing. Their analysts were able to find 34% savings in waste and are working to recover improperly billed recurring monthly fees by the vendor at both of our locations. This was unexpected and a blessing. Their review of our credit card processing found that we were fully optimized which gave us assurance that we’re being the best stewards possible with the donations we receive which is important for our board and donors to know.

In getting to interact with Adam and David in this process I’ve come to see their deep and personal commitment to God’s work, and to understand that this is a calling for them – it is their ministry. I would encourage all our Citygate Network members to have a conversation about how they can be of service.

Meet your Schooley Mitchell Team for Citygate Network

Through diverse lived experiences, your Schooley Mitchell Team for Citygate Network has the empathy, compassion, commitment, and expertise to serve you so that you can meet the needs of those you serve.

David Dow – As a survivor of child abuse, David knows the feelings of abandonment, terror, and a self-worth so low that taking his own life seemed like the only way out. But by the grace of God, David opted to survive and thrive compelled by a bottomless well of empathy to help others.

Whether it is working to help nonprofits like Citygate Network members or ministries to have the resources to fund your programs and services; or mentoring a young woman whose dignity has been shredded by incarceration to have real chances to achieve her full potential, David passionately works to do all the good that he can.

Adam Baker – Growing up poor and homeless or housing-insecure for years didn’t break Adam; rather it infused in him a deep desire and motivation to serve others. First in service to his country as a military officer, and now as he works tirelessly to help make sure nonprofit organizations like Citygate Network members and ministries have the resources that they need to achieve their missions.

David and Adam’s national nonprofit clients include Citygate Network, Catholic Charities, Goodwill, YWCA, as well as local and community nonprofits across the United States.
