

Do you have time to analyze your wireless bills every month?

Most businesses just pay their wireless bills without any scrutiny if they don't vary too much from month to month. The truth is, most owners, CFOs, and other members of senior management simply don't have time to analyze their bills that frequently.

Unfortunately, this can lead to wasted money due to rate creep or billing errors. Errors that you might be charged for, without realizing, can include:

- Billed for disconnected services – sometimes, after cancelling a service such as an extra phone line or data add-on, a customer may still find themselves incurring charges for the extra service they did not receive.
- Billed for another customer's services – these kinds of mistakes happen and can be quite costly if not flagged.
- Non-recurring errors – there can be many one-time mistakes, such as incorrect service or overage charges, that are easily resolved as long as they're noticed.
- Tax errors – if your business operates in multiple nations, states, or regions, multiple tax laws and processes may leave you susceptible to errors you don't understand or know to look out for.

So, when you don't have the time to analyze your bills, what do you do?

That's where Schooley Mitchell comes in.

We analyze our client's wireless expenses to determine whether they are overspending, and if cost-saving solutions can be found. Once we present our findings, if the client chooses to move forward with implementation, we remain as a single point of contact for ongoing monitoring, analysis, and support.

What this means is, not only do we ensure you're paying fair, correct rates on your wireless bills, but we continue to be vigilant on your behalf on an ongoing basis.

Author: Gordon Matthews

